For the Democrats, New Age Politics Clinton and Gore Embrace the Era of Self-Discovery

By Maureen Dowd New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - As Sally Jessy Raphael, the TV talk-show host, was sitting in her New York apartment watching the final night of the Democratic convention, she had a shock of recogni-

All that talk about addiction, trauma, dysfunctional family relationships, marital troubles, self-help and recovery sounded like the daily diet on her show. And there was Bill Clinton on the podium saying "I love you" to his wife, and Roger Clinton saying "I love you" to his brother and kissing an Alcoholics Anonymous token he carries.

"These people belong on talk shows," Ms. Raphael told her husband, Carl. "They're the stuff we're made of."

She appreciated the performance so much that she is trying to book the Arkansas governor and his running mate, Senator Al Gore of Tennessee, for her show. But as a voter, she says, she would rather have heard more about issues and less about shattering emotional barriers and making organic connections.

"They were pushing all the same buttons that we push on talk shows," she said. "It's all very well for me to do shows on lifestyle or for people to watch soap operas, but for politicians to enter this gray area where it is neither news nor entertainment is a step

Mr. Clinton and Mr. Gore have both acknowledged undergoing family counseling, the Arkansas governor to deal with his brother's and stepfather's substance abuse and the Tennessee senator with his wife to overcome the trauma of their son's being struck by a car three years ago. Moreover, they are enthusiastic about what the counseling has done for their mental states and personal lives. Mr. Clinton said at the convention, "I wish I had known more about human psychology as a child." Tipper Gore, the senator's wife, has said that their therapy sessions helped them learn about marital teamwork. President George Bush refuses to "get on the couch" or explore his psyche. The haby-boomer Democrats do so with alacrity. So the autumn offers a fascinating contest between John Wayne Republicans, never crying or even blinking, and Iron John Democrats, seeking the inner man and the missing father.

It is a far cry from 1988, when the mere unfounded rumor that Michael S. Dukakis had sought psychiatric treatment after the death of his brother, Stelian, caused him to drop 8 points in the polls in a few days. And even further from 1972, when Senator Thomas F. Eagleion of Missouri was dropped as the Democratic vice presidential candidate after disclosures that he had undergone electric sbock therapy for depression.

Certainly, the country has had its share of political wives and children who have declared themselves addicted or emotionally damaged. But until Lawton Chiles was elected governor of Florida in 1990 after acknowledging use of the anti-depressant Prozac, male politicians were always supposed to be stoic. Ronald Reagan, the son of an alcoholic, rarely talked about it and never used it to fashion his political persons.

Perhaps it was inevitable, once the challengers took the campaign into the talk-show arena, that the political dialogue would grow more intimate and confessional. Still, the Republicans seem siunned to see their rivals happily dwelling in what one calls "Oprahland," a reference to Oprah Winfrey, another talk-show

"Real men don't get on the couch," said Torie Clarke, the president's campaign spokeswoman. "Clinton reminds you of Woody Allen, sitting there giving you 14 different explanations of wby he did something and what caused him to do something and how that affects what he's doing today. And then there's Gore, who's having Shirley MacLaine-style our-of-body experiences."

Roger Stone, the Republican consultant, agreed. "The next thing you know. Al Gore will be showing up in a tie-dyed shirt wearing crystals," he said. William Kristol, Vice President's Dan Quayle's chief of staff. suggested that the Democrats were not fishing for those critical blue-collar, white male votes in the right manly fashion: "Bush and Quayle will run as macho individualists. Clinton and Gore will run on a New Age Covenant of psychobabble." Baker Finds Arabs Silent on Rabin Bid Arab side during Mr. Baker's trip, which ended after a two-day swing through Asia.

There were some grudging Arab statements of praise for the new Israeli prime minister, Yitzhak Rabin, but there was nothing from Damascus or Amman or Lebanon or Jidda, or from the Palestinians, that Mr. Rabin could use to fend off rightist critics who say that his partial freeze on settlement-building in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip was a giveaway to the Arabs.

Mr. Rabin has been in office less than two weeks, and Arab governments are waiting to see if he lives up to his promises. After dealing with an Israeli Likud government that did everything it could to drag its feet, the Arab leaders want to make sure Mr. Rabin is for real before they commit themselves.

Also contributing to the Arabs' lack of response is the concern, expressed in every Arab capital that Mr. Baker visited, that his putative plans to leave the State Department and lead President George Bush's re-election campaign will sap the American energy from the peace

Since the hard-line government of Yitzhak Shamir did not appear interested in offering the Arabs anything, or even in testing their willingness to trade land for peace, the Arabs could stand on this principle, certain that Mr. Shamir would never really ask them to meet him half-

That is a serious challenge, but for now it has not been addressed by any Arab leader except President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt, who immediately invited Mr. Rabin to Carro. That visit took place last week.

After a meeting of Syrian, Jordanian, Leba-nese and Palestiman foreign ministers on Saturday, Syria's foreign minister, Farouk Shara, acknowledged Mr. Rabin's "change of tone and style," but he said Israel had yet to make a sufficient commitment to peace.

Democrats, Riding High, Rake in the Money

WASHINGTON - Reaping the rewards of the largest postconvention popularity surge since such measurements began being taken, Democratic officials say July may well be the strongest month in this election season for raising money and one of the best in the

The Democrats expect to raise more than $8 million this month, compared with $3.5 million in July four years ago. And if they keep up the pace, the Democratic fund-raisers will set a record for a

The Democrats still remain far behind the Bush-Quayle fundraisers, who had $7.7 million in cash left over from the primaries. By the end of May, the Republicans had raised an additional $31.7 million that could be used for presidential and congres compared with $11.5 million for the Democrats.

Extreme Leftist' Versus 'Inherited Wealth'

PORTLAND, Maine -- The name is Bean, L.L. Bean, But Linda Lorraine Bean, the granddaughter of the founder of the outdoor clothing company that is practically synonymous with Maine, is not selling boots or down-filled jackets. Instead, Ms. Bean is promoting her conservative philosophy, which she bopes will enable ber to triumph over Representative Thomas H. Andrews, a liberal Democrat, in the congressional race this fall for the district that includes President George Bush's summer home in Kennebunkport.

In a state where party labels are not usually important and voters are seldom swayed by ideology, the contest between Ms. Bean, 51, and Mr. Andrews, 41, is already considered the most contentious in memory. "Tom Andrews is an extreme leftist," said Ms. Bean, who has been feuding for years with Maine's Republican leaders, whom she has denounced as being too moderate.

Ms. Bean is opposed to abortion rights, gay-rights legislation and gm control, and she believes in Ronald Reagan's program that tax cuts will spur economic growth and lower the deficit. By contrast, Mr. Andrews, a first-term congressman, supports abortion rights and is a sponsor of gay-rights legislation. "Linda Bean comes into this race with her inherited wealth, and she is willing to spend it to get elected," he said.

Bush Cites His 'Guts' But Clinton Asks Action

By Andrew Rosenthal Vew York Times Service

NEENAH, Wisconsin - President George Busb and his advisers confronted Governor Bill Clinton head-on for the first time on foreign policy Monday, opening the new front by calling the Democrat's ideas on Yugoslavia "reck-less" and painting Mr. Bush as the candidate that can be trusted with the nation's security.

On the stump in Wisconsin and Michigan, Mr. Bush talked in hushed tones of late-night phone calls from the White House crisis center to underscore his foreign policy credentials.

"The American people need to know that the man who answers that phone has the experience, the seasoning, the guts to do the right thing," Mr. Bush said in Wyoming, Michigan. Behind the scenes, Mr. Bush's aides quickly pounced on a policy stalement on Yugoslavia issued by Mr. Clinton's office in Little Rock. Arkansas. It called on Mr. Bush to seek United Nations authorization for selective bombing of Serbian targets.

Describing Mr. Clinton's ideas as "reckless." Marlin Fitzwater. Mr. Bush's spokesman, said they showed Mr. Clinton and his running mate, Senator Al Gore, were "a long way from being qualified to lead the country."

Raising doubts about Mr. Clinton's ability to run the nation's foreign policy has been a latent theme of the Bush campaign for some time. But it was not until Monday that it emerged so strongly, propelled in part by the opening given by Mr. Clinton's statement on Yogoslavia.

Mr. Clinton called on Mr. Bush in a written statement to show "real leadership" in the Balkans and to "act with the greatest possible urgency before it's too late."

He said that Mr. Bush should order the navy to stop freighters at sea in order to tighten the economic blockade on Serbia and that "the international community" should pursue war-crimes charges against the Serbian government.

Mr. Clinton also said that if Serbs persist io violating cease-fire accords in Bosnia-Herzegovina. "the United States should take the lead" in seeking Security Council authorization for air strikes against Serbian forces attacking relief con-

"It sounds like the kind of reckless approach that indicates he better do some more bomework on foreign policy," Mr. Fitzwater said. 'It's clear he's unaware of the political complications in Yugoslavia."

Mr. Bush himself did not mention Mr. Clinton's statement, but st each of his two stops, campaign aides pressed the attack on Mr.

Clinton's trustiworthiness. In Michigan, Governor John Engler called Mr. Clinton too "untried and untested" to be president.

219 U.S. Lawmakers Urge UN Security Council to Impose Oil and Arms Embargo on Rafsanjani Government

Text of Statement

As we witness the rapid advancement towards peace. democracy and international understanding, the international community remains concerned about violations of the most basic and fundamental human rights by the Rafsanjani administration in Iran.

Last year, the Iranian regime's official media reported a dramatic increase in official public executions and stonings. In March of this year. the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the European Parliament adopted resolutions condenining this increase in executions and human rights violations, and called for the continued monitoring of the human rights situation in Iran.

In 1991, we witnessed a new wave of suppression of women. According to official media reports. tens of thousands of women were flogged or arrested for improper veiling. The suppression and violation of the rights of religious and ethnic minorities also continued. Meanwhile. Rafsanjani's diptomats launched a new campaign of assassinations abroad. The call for Salman Rushdie's execution was reiterated, and the Italian and Japanese translators of his book were attacked, resulting in the death of the latter. Thus ended the myth of Rafsanjani's "moderation".

The Rafsanjani government again crossed the borders in an air raid on one of the bases of the National Liberation Army of Iran on April 5, 1992. This revealed, on the one hand, its fear of the Iranian people's Resistance and, on the other, again demonstrated that this regime has no respect for international norms or continitatents.

Due to its economie bankruptey and internal crisis, the mounting public protests, dentonstrations, and popular resistance, the Rafsanjani regime is obliged as never before to oppose regional peace, and to instigate crises and export terrorism and fundamentalism ahroad.

The spread of fundamentalism in the Islamic World is an official policy of this religious dictatorship ruling Iran, intended to realize its dreams of expansionism, Iran's rulers' openly declared aspirations for the republics of the former Soviet Union: their export of fundamentalism to Algeria. Sudan, Tunisia, Egypt, Jordan, and Turkey; and their campaign to acquire nuclear weapons have set off alarm bells. This situation requires an active approach to the ominous phenomenon of fundamentalism which will prevent the Iranian regime from taking advantage of the religious sentiments of the people of the region.

Therefore, the time has come for the free world to form a common front against Fundamentalism with those fighting for peace and democracy against the Iranian regime. In accouncing a specific program and determining responsible policies visrecent developments, the National Council of Resistance of Iran, led by Mr. Massoud Rujavi, has demonstrated that it is determined and able to contribute to peace and stability in this sensitive region.

Reports from impartial sources confirm that the NCR, hacked by its military wing, the National Liberation Army of Iran, backed by the populace, and in step with strikes and demonstrations over the past few months within Iran, is capable of establishing freedom and democracy in Iran. Experience has shown that this resistance's profound popular and religious roots within Iran's people are the best impediment to the Iranian regime's abuse of popular religious sentiments. Hence, this resistance is the solution to the phenomenon of fanatic fundamentalism.

WASHINGTON - In May, when the Bush administration announced a plan to collect fetal tissue for medical research into Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases and other illnesses, officials stated that they could supply all that would be needed without using tissue from induced abortions.

But newly obtained memorandums from officials at the National Institutes of Health show that the edministration greatly exaggerated the amount of fetal tissue that its storage bank could obtain from miscarriages and from ectopic pregnancies, in which the fertilized egg develops outside the uterus.

Since 1988 the administrations of Ronald Reagan and George Bush have barred federal financing of research using fetal tissue, on the ground that it could potentially encourage abortions.

When the plan for a tissue bank plan put forward in May, in the heat of a political battle over abortion issues, Dr. James O. Mason, head of the Public Health Service, said that a storage bank could initially collect usable tissue from 1,500 fetuses a year and that eventhe figure would rise to

A spokeswoman for the Department of Health and Human Services said last week that medical experts remained confident that the tissue bank would fully meet researchers' needs

But a senior NIH official who spoke on condition of anonymity said that the estimates of how much tissue could be collected had been misrepresented by senior officials of the Health and Human Services

The numbers we used were rounded upward, and upper-limit estimates were always used because we were under a great deal of pressure to use the absolute outer-limits numbers," he said. "What we came up with — 1.500 or 2,000 fetuses could be harvested — is literally the ing the ban.

Experiments over the last decade indicate that transplanting of fetal organs or cells could help patients with intractable diseases like Parkinson's or Alzheimer's. Transplant recipients can tolerate fetal cells better than adult cells, and preliminary research found that cells from healthy fetuses, usually 7 to 16 weeks, can take over the functions of diseased cells.

effort to determine if such a bank is at all feasible," the NIH official

When Congress voted earlier this year to lift the ban, Mr. Bush vetoed the measure. The administra-tion's plan was offered as a way of meeting the needs of medical re-searchers without compromising the president's opposition to abortion and abortion rights. Critics derided it as a maneuver to find votes to uphold the veto. Last month, the House fell 14 votes short of the two-thirds majority required to what might be necessary, Dr. Red-mond said. He estimates that if the ban is lifted, at least a half dozen scientific teams will want to carry out 20 fetal tissue transplants each in the first year and more as research progresses. Because of the varying quality of the tissue, each transplant can require dozens of fetal samples, he said. Even samples from 2,000 fetuses a year would not meet the need.

> Taking intn account their doubts, the staff of the House Subcommittee on Human Resources and Intergovernmental Relations estimated the number of fetuses that could be collected at 24 for the entire nation in a year.

Mr. Lehman said the volunteers would serve for two years, teaching English and helping train Latvian teachers who, in many cases, have never met a native English speaker. The goal, he said, is to help Latvia integrate once again into the

"It's not going in be easy for some old teachers to teach in a new way," Mr. Lehman said. "We can help in the transition toward students asking questions, thinking for themselves.

In Kabul, Government by Chaos Is Going Nowhere e and the inability of a government preoccupied by internal power struggles to begin laying out its polices.

Alghan families who had fled the civil war in their country took a break at Torkhan, on the Afghan-Pakistani border, as they made their way home.

For more than a decade, the wary coalition of guerrilla armies, all professing allegiance to Islam, remained bound together by the common enemy of the Soviet Union and the governments in Kabul that Moscow supported. Victory over that enemy has not, however, brought with it either Islamic fraternity or peace.

In recent days, Kabul a shambling city of low concrete and mud buildings sprawiing across a valley that cuts through the Hindu Kush mountains, has been torn by violent clashes between competing guerrilla groups, battles reflecting both the depths of Afghanistan's future difficulties and the fragility of the guerrillas' triumph.

Recently, a Shitte guerrilla group backed by Iran, Islamie Coalition Council of Afghanistan, or Hezb-i-Wahadat, waged battles against Islamic Unity, or Ittehad-i Islami, a Sunni force supported by Saudi Arabia, for control of the capital's western neighborhoods. At least 60 people were killed and more than 300 wounded.

These secrarian fights reflect a broader instability within the government itself. Under a pact crafted in Pakistan in 1989, Sibghatullah Mojaddidi, a moderate religious leacher and relatively weak guerrilla leader, was to be president for two months, after which he was to relinquish power in Burhanuddin Rabbani, the head of the powerful and more fundamentalisi guerrilla organization, Islamic Society, or Jamiat-i Islami. After a few weeks in office, Mr. Mojaddidi decided he did not wish to surrender the reins of government and said that he would remain until elections were held. Other guerrilla leaders who commanded far greater firepower made it clear that the original terms of his appointment remarned in force and be stepped aside. Now, Mr. Rabbani, who is scheduled to hold office for only four months, is uncer-tain what will follow his tenure. Some leaders in Kabul insist that elections must be held for a new government. But others are demanding the convening of a lova jirga, a traditional meeting of tribal elders to decide the shape of the new govern-

Iran, Saudi Arabia, and Pakistan are iostling for influence in Kabul, indeed for a role as Afghanistan's new big brother, A few weeks ago, without asking Kahul's government, Iran opened a consulate in Mazar-i-Sharif, in the north. Pakistan, which looks eagerly toward Afghanistan as a potential thoroughfare to Central Asian markets, has struggled to overcome its decadelong support for the guerrilla group led by Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, which in the end played no role in the takeover of Kabul, Indeed, Mr. Hekmatvar's faction of the Islamic Party, or Hezb-i Islami, rocketed the capital for weeks demanding that the new govern-ment capitulate to his demands for running the country, alienating other groups,

And Saudi Arahia, which backed Islamic Unity of Mujahidin of Afghanistan, or Ittehad-i-Islami Afghan Muhahidin, one of the strongest factions, has sought to undermine the influence of fran, and the Shiites, in Javor of the Sunni majority.

Whether, in fact, any of these contests matter remains increasingly problematic. With each passing week that Kabul is gripped by its own discord and rivalries, its importance for the rest of the country diminishes. Ethnie, linguistic, and sectarian centers are forming the new administrative regions of Afghanistan.

Despite the slow fragmentation of the country, though, and despite continued fighting that is gradually consuming Kabul, hundreds of thousands of Afghan refugees have decided to return home, not to the country of Afghanistan, but to their villages, their families, their tribes.

"What is Afghanistan?" said Ghulam Nahi, a Pathan carpet dealer from Kandahar who has been living in Quetta for a decade. "All this fighting. What is it for? We don't care. I am from Kandahar. My tribe matters. That is all.

Europe's Refugee Crisis

United Nations officials are already assisting more than 2 million people who have fled their homes for safer areas. A million more refugees could leave their devastated towns and villages by winter. It is Europe's worst refugee crisis since World War II.

To deal with the refugees' plight, UN officials have called an urgent meeting of foreign ministers in Geneva this week. The mass exodus cries out for a compassionate, comprehensive response from Bosnia's European neighbors - and from America.

The murderous struggle among the battered republics of the former Yugoslavia has already claimed more than 20,000 lives. The survivors, meanwhile, must contend with sectarian hatreds and daily danger. Whole towns and villages are being purged of Muslims and Croats as the result of "ethnic cleansing" operations by one side or another. As more and more people seek protection, there are fewer and fewer safe places for them to go within the borders of the former Yugoslavia.

The UN high commissioner for refugees estimates that more than 2.5 million people have been driven from their homes. About 1.8 million have found precarious protecoon within conotries of the former federaoon. The crisis is straining the binits of sympathetic response, Croatia, oow over-whelmed by more than 600,000 refugees, is more refugees the rest of the former federation, including Bosnia, can absorb.

The conflict in Bosnia is taking a staggering buman toll—oot only in lives lost, but in lives wrenched from their moorings.

Most of Europe has been content to sit on the sidelines. The most notable exception is Germany, which has taken in about 200,000 refugees. Hungary, Austria and Sweden combined are sheltering about 150,000. Although many European nations are tightening their borders against economic migrants in search of better jobs, the refugees fleeing the former Yugoslavia are political refugees. They are the classic vic-tims of persecution that refugee conventions are designed to protect.

Their tragedy demands a humanitarian response, but one where the burden is shared fairly. Those unable to find safety in the former Yugoslavia are entitled to temporary safe haven in other lands. The more prosperous nations also need to contribute money to help the refugees. An international appeal for $142 million for the UN refugee effort has brought in about $107 million thus far.

While the heaviest burden falls on Europe, other nations can help. The U.S. De-partment of Justice, for example, ought to extend temporary safe haven, as allowed under the 1990 Immigration Act, to an estimated 20,000 students and other war-torn area visitors oow in Atherica.

Europe and the United States are understandably fearful that those granted temporary refuge will find some way to stay permanently. But Western powers cannot have it both ways. They cannot let the communal bloodshed in the Balkans conwhelmed by more than 600,000 refugees, is shotting its doors. It is unclear how many have, and then turn their backs on the desperate and dispossessed.

Democracy for Thailand

Prime Minister Anand Panyarachun's delicate moves to trim the political and economic power of the Thai military lack the melodrama of May's bloody street confrootacoos in Bangkok, but should be succeed the effects would be beneficial and widely felt. Refocusing the armed forces on legitimate defense coocerns would simplify peacekeeping tasks in Cambodia, cut a key lifeline to Burma's tyrannical military dictatorship and complicate life for interna-tional narcotics traffickers. With such substantial dividends at stake, Mr. Anand's efforts deserve wholehearted U.S. support. Military officers have dominated Thai poliocal life since they overturned the absolute mooarcby 60 years ago. The army's role io quelling civil unrest has provided a pretext for frequent coups, Even when it does oot cootrol the government, the military wields substantial political and economic power. Officers rule Thailand's main border regions, which face the Khmer Rouge zone of Cambodia, war-torn ethnic enclaves in Burma and the drug-rich Golden Triangle. Officers have also exercised a stranglehold over key state enterprises like airlines, banks, telephone and transport companies, distorting economic priorities.

Mr. Anand has stripped the armed forces of their role in suppressing domestic protest — a direct response to the May bloodbath. Now he has begun the complicated process of extricating state companies from military control. The most important step lies ahead: establishing civilian authority over contraband border trade. Many border commanders have become independent entrepreneurs, with lucrative trading ties with Khmer Rouge warlords, drug lords and operatives of Burma's thuggish State Law and Order Res-toration Council. Imposing accountable ci-vilian control could greatly strengthen inter-national efforts to make the Khmer Rouge comply with peace agreements and press Rangoon to respect elections and human rights, It could also reinforce efforts to interdict the region's heavy opium traffic.

Mr. Anand cannot do everything at once despite strong public backing for his moves against excessive military power. Thailand remains unusually prone to coup attempts by worried or greedy officers. But Washington, as Bangkok's most important military ally, wields considerable influence. By signaling its strong endorsement of Mr. Anand's moves, it could usefully reinforce his efforts. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Excellence in Barcelona

athletes from 22 countries showed up in London, Today, if you ran a finger down the alphabetical list of countries that have sent teams to Barcelona for the Summer Games, you would find No. 22 about halfway through the Bs (Botswana), There are 150 more after that, and 10,000 athletes in all.

The Olympics have become very big and also very businesslike. Cities around the world vie for the booor of having the Games, and then spend many millions to pot them on. If they are lucky the bosts can make that up, and then some, with the huge sums paid by one or another American television network for broadcast rights. (NBC has invested about half a billion dollars this year.) A targe oumber of the athletes are acknowledged professionals now, and the Games are quadrennially plagued by political disputes, nationalistic excess, doping scandals and unseemly squabbles over power and moocy.

In fact, it is easy enough to take a cynical view of the Olympics as a copyrighted, trademarked, thoroughly commercialized production that has lost touch with its original animating ideals. But then the running,

Did we say youth? Actually, one of the more engaging sights at these Olympics is that of the old pros from America's National Basketball Association kicking up their heels, or at least their knee braces, as they set out to show largely adoring crowds and opposition athletes how the game is really played. Unless You Are a Banker

Seeing bank credit card rates stuck at more than 18 percent when money in the bank is earning less than 4 percent interest iust doesn't make sense unless you are a banker. Even Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan is puzzled. The Fed has cut interest rates 23 times in the last three years. Banks have been quick to drop rates that they pay on deposits but reluctant to reduce rates for consumer loans. The gap between what American banks charge customers for loans and what banks pay on deposits is wider than ever. That means that banks are making money, a nice reversal of massive loan losses that plunged the industry into its worst crisis since the Depression. Meaowhile, bank lending is down sharply. Even if businesses and consumers are willing to pay the high rates, they are finding it tougher to qualify for loans. In an unusually frank response to a question during a House committee bearing, Mr. Greenspan said banks bad been slow to pass on rate cuts to customers. He suggested that bank policies are stunting a recovery and making it more difficult for the Fed to influence the economy. Mr. Greenspan also ooted the banks' cootinuing besitancy in lending.

Consumers, shouldering old debt, are scared of borrowing at current rates, given the trocertain economic and employment outlook. The caution of lenders and consumers is miderstandable. At least both finally have sobered up from the credit binge of the 1980s. But unless banks begin to push down loan rates to help sour consumption, the nation could be facing a triple-dip recession.

Europe and America: The Rules Have Changed

BONN — German reunification and its implications ended 40 years of the Cold War. This will make only affect U.S.-German relations in the next decade by placing them in a widely different strategic setting, but also change the rules and unspo-ken assumptions of the trans-Atlan-tic relationship.

The two nations will be the key actors in the world of the 1990s, with Germany the chief promoter of European economic, monetary and politi-cal union. The United States is the last superpower, but one without a desire to confront and one oo longer willing and able to carry the burden.

This ambivalence has made U.S. foreign policy less than predictable for friend and foe alike — the last 40 years being a long exception. last 40 years being a long exception - and it has created an unspoken fear among Americans that they

At the end of the 20th century it is America's privilege and predicament that it cannot escape its role as a leader of the West.

Alas, today the United States is worried about itself more than about the outside world. And this, as seen from the outside, is less than reassuring. ture America will have to take up once again the role of the balancer in En-rope that England, throughout the 19th century, exercised so masterfully. Germany and the United States need to formulate a new trans-Atlantic arrangement. In this, Europe will oot count so much for its military potential but rather for its conceptual and political cohesion — and whether it can make itself essential to the long-term security and interests of the Unit-ed States. Here Germany has more to contribute than most Germans would accept after the successful conclusion of the Cold War, above all a willingness to take part in painful decisions and their implementation.

has raised the stakes by asking whether it was time to design a European military strategy. In Germany, this was greeted with less enthusiasm than the French had expected. Above all, the French idea would increase the risk of the United States abandoning the Continent, thus pushing Germany even more in the dreaded direction of having to look after its own security.

Meanwhile, the French president

It would be tragic if the Atlantic nations misunderstood the fragility of the world in transition. The United States still has responsibilities and interests in Europe, both visible and invisible. It will have to balance nuclear power. Beyond the military sphere, it will have to be the team leader in managing the Soviet succession and limiting the chaotic implications. Germany will ask the United States for two things: to support the effort to save Eastern Europe from the post-Communist abyss and to continue to be the modear lender of last resort. The Pax Americana will be a jointventure, or it will not take place.

This comment — along with the accompanying essays by Michel Rocard and David Owen — was adapted for The Washington Past by Henry Brandon from "In Search of a New World Order: The Future of U.S.-European Relations," published last month and edited by Mr. Brandon.

Europe's Drive to Union Is Irreversible

PARIS - With the end of the Cold War, it is only natural that trans-Atlantic relations should undergo some changes, that the solidati-ty between the United States and the states of Europe should enter a new phase. It is doubtless too early to propose a new global organization — let us be humble enough to recognize our doubts and uncertainties - but the Maastricht summit opened up unprecedented political prospects. What was not foreseen was that public opinion could refuse to go along with the docisions of the governments.

. It is no longer a question of whether the new European democracies will be members of the European Community. The question is when, how, in what form and for what purpose. The strength of European union lies in the fact that it proposes a specific and coherent political, economic and social development model that we might call a social-democratic model. The process of European union is now irreversible. Giving societies a new say in the running of their affairs, and putting political concerns before strategic considerations, the democratization of Central and Eastern Europe has helped to redirect our attention toward social issues (the environment, town planning, migration and so on). We must now adopt decision-making structures in keeping with the scale of these problems, which are no longer confined to individual countries.

Security must be approached in a similar spirit. The former security system was based oo the principle that an attack on one state was an attack on all. The new system might be qualified as a community security system, insofar as the main risks that a state can run are those that threaten to destabilize its environment.

In such a context, the security policies of the future will increas involve collective choices (no single state, for example, could interfere in the crisis in Yugoslavia) that will be impossible to plan in advance. This changing pattern in our joint security must lead to a corresponding adjustment in trans-Atlantic relation

There is an acute fear that NATO, the very symbol of trans-Atlantic relations, might be in jeopardy. For a long time, misunderstanding marred relations between France and the alliance. Today, however, NATO is a solid reference point in a world in turmoil. Its know-how, its experience must be preserved, and I would favor France intensifying its cooperation with NATO.

But can Europeans be confronted on their own territory with crises that do not concern the United States? For some people the very idea was a soil in the years to come, and Europe therefore must have the military means to support its policy.

I rejoice that this idea has met with a broad consensus among my fellow Enropeans, who decided in Maastricht to make the Western Enropean Union the instrument of this policy. The French-German initiative to set up a European army corps is in direct accord with the political union process. It would be the very symbol of European defense: What could be more eloquent than a common European army? The main threat to security for the future, though, is the proliferation of weapons capable of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weapons. The new international context calls for a redefinition of security policy. Only thus will we achieve the more cooperative approach to the management of international affairs to which we aspire. In economic and trade relations.

misunderstandings can also easily arise. On the one hand, Americans (and indeed the Japanese) are inclined to wonder whether Europe after 1993 will be a fortress.

To oversimplify somewhat, one might say that the United States is afraid that European union will spark off a wave of regionalism that will threaten the spirit and the achievements of the General Agree-ment on Tariffs and Trade, while the Europeans fear that globalism will favor one particular region at this stage, namely the United States, more than the other GATT members.

There is no doubt that we are heading toward three increasingly integrated regional entities. But that does not mean that the barriers between these regions will oot be low-ered further. There is hardly any other time in history when great na-tions or groups of nations have enjoyed economic relations so free and so lasting as those that exist between North America and Europe.

perhaps 30 million or more newcomers in the first two decades of the 21st century. That will make the immigration wave that began in 1965 the longest and biggest ever, adding 61 million people to the population.

This influx provided the tinder for rioting in Los Angeles and the Washington Heights section of New York City. About 45 percent of south-central Los Angeles is Hispanic, the Census Boreau says, and many newcomers participated in the riots.

Incredibly, the immigration question has received no attention from Bill Clinton or George Bush, although statistics expose a formidable problem that increasingly impinges on every aspect of Americans' lives.

California, November's biggest prize, is a basket case, largely because it will have to be the team leader in prize, is a basket case, largely because of an handsont food in the 1980s that increased its population by 30.5 percent, to 31 million. Demands on social, health and educational services million newly legalized immigrants.

And no wonder seven out of 10 Californians think the state should limit immigration. That seems to be the national consenses, too. A Roper poll taken from March 27 to April 14 found that 69 percent of respondents would like to "reduce" immigration. Eight out of 10 think that immigration policies "need revision."

First, a freeze on immigration for up to five years (except for spouses and minor children of U.S. catzens and legal residents) could prove beneficial. This moratorium would reduce misair blow to trans-Atlantic solidarity. But this is the type of crisis that Europecompetition for scarce jobs; give the economy a chance to recover; cut so-cial, health and educational costs and ans may have to suffer on their own relieve pressure on the chynonistal. Above all, it would give the millions of immugrants already on the scene an opportunity to assimilate.

Second, there should be an all-out drive to halt illegal entries. This would involve creeting unsurmountable barof southern border where 90 percent of illegal aliens cross.

The cost, about $300 million, hardly compares with the $5 billion spent yearly on benefits for illegal families. The Border Patrol should be increased to 6,000 agents (4,324 are assigned to 2,000 miles of border), and the National Guard and Army should be used when necessary.

Third, Washington should offer
Mexico, the biggest source of immigrants, an incentive: The United States would underwrite a joint-effort to "green" its northern border, enabling Mexico to increase food production and farm employment in order to deter Mexicans from heading north for food and work.

Fourth, President Bush should air the issue with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari of Mexico and try to persuade him to discard its policy of considering the United States a safety valve for its vast army of unemployed. He should obtain Mr. Salinas's approval to deport illegals into the Mexican interior, where they usually origi-nate. This would drastically cut the number of illegals who easily re-enter the United States because Merican law permits them to be deported only to the Mexican side of the border. ... U.S. immigration policy is conducive to the proliferation of a foreign underclass that could become permanently unassimilable, thus fostering inner-city ghettos and ethnic tensions. What is more, the economic effects of the growth of such an underclass would weaken the country's power to compete in the global marketplace.

by the products of American culture. It is, for example, feminists, otherwise quite liberal, who have been most vocal in the fight against pornography and who in some jurisdictions have tried to pass laws to criminalize it as a violation of women. Tipper Gore, wife of the Democratic vice presidential candidate, Al Gore, co-founded an organization to fight obscene lyrics in popular music. And Mr. Quayle's attack on "Cop Killer" has been joined by such principled liberals as The New Republic's Michael Kinsley. Mr. Quayle has tapped into the widespread anxiety that American culture is indeed at war with Americans' values. But it is only partly correct to identify the villain as the "cultural clite." There is also the corporate elite: the media moguls who publish and profit from this stuff. Which makes you wonder at the Dem-ocrais' defensive response to the culture war. They could have tapped the popular anger by identifying the culprits as not just (presumably liberal) scriptwriters but as (presumably conservative) media execntives. Instead, the Democrats take indignant offense at the whole "family values" issue. Real family values, declare the Democrats, means providing welfare and education and health care to families rather than crusading against the culture.

But why make the distinction? Why disparage one legitimate family concern at the expense of another? Of course, health care and education are of concern to families. But of concurrent and deep concern is the cultural environ-

What kind of cultural environment? Consider "Batman Returns." A movie of such brooding sadomasochistic sexuality. of such cool and casual cruelty may suit some adult tastes. But it is oot for 7-yearolds. Why then was it so mercilessly hawked at McDonald's which, in an egregious marketing tie-in, offered Batman ligures with every Happy Meal? Adults don't eat Happy Meals.

My son, age 7, does. And, like all his friends, he wants to see Batman. I don't allow him to. But I wonder: In the face of one grotesque cultural product after another, how many times must parents say no? How successful can parents be at shielding their children from a corrosive, corrupting mass culture?

If statistics are any guide, the answer seems to be: not very. Every index of youthful anomic — drug abuse, teen pregnancy, suicide — is at alarming, epidemic levels. Raising children is hard enough. Raising them in an omnipresent corrupting culture is nearly impossible.

The corruption I am talking about does not involve imbuing youth with new and subversive ideas. "Batman Returns" is no dialogue of Plato. Today's mass culture would not know an idea, subversive or otherwise, if it met one, it traffics in sensibility and image, with a premium on the degrading: rap lyrics in which women are for using and abusing, movies in which violence is administered with 2 smirk and a smile. Jack Nicholson's much celebrated Joker in the first "Batman" acid in the face with a laugh - is about as close as one gets to cultural evil.

Casual cruelty, knowing sex. Nothing could be better designed to rob youth of its most ephemeral gift: innocence, The ultimate effect of American mass culture is to make children older than their years, to turn them into the knowing, cynical pseudo-adult that is by now the model kid of the television sitcom.

It is a crime against children to make them older than their years. And it won't do for the purveyors of cynicism to hide behind the First Amendment. Of course they have the right to publish Ice-T and peddle Batman to kids. But they should have the decency not to. That lack of decency deserves attack. If Democrats would stop portraying this as a Dan Quayle issue and help forge s national consensus against this stuff, the culture makers might begin to listen. Washington Past Writers Group.

Those Glittering Ball Players' Salaries 25 2

PALO ALTO, California — If you believe that multimillion-dollar salaries for America's basehall players have got out of line, there is at least one objective measure that confirms your impression. Remember the old saving, intended as high praise, that someone is "worth his weight in gold"?

Well. Babe Ruth and Joe DiMaggio were paid almost exactly that in their peak years and so were many other star players until the early 1980s.

MEANWHILE

In 1928 Babe Ruth was in the second year of a three-year contract worth $70,000 a year, by far the highest salary ever up to that time. The year before, he bad set his record of 60 home runs and his fame transceoded baseball. He was a world figure in the Jazz Age.

lo 1927 the average price of gold was $20.67 an ounce. Gold is measured in troy nunces, defined as 480 grains. Ordinary ounces have 437.5 grains. Therefore, an ordinary pound equals 14.6 troy ounces. To get a person's weight in gold you multiply the price per ounce

By Leonard Koppett

by 14.6 - and that result by the persoo's weight to pounds.
Ruth played at 215 pounds (97 kilograms), which meant he was worth $64,883.13 in gold — not out of line with his $70,000 salary.

In 1930 and 1931, Babe Ruth's salary peaked at $80,000, which was $5,000 higher than President Herbert Hoover's. This prompted Ruth's muchquoted remark, "I had a better year than he did."

But in 1934, uoder President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the price of gold was fixed officially at $35 an ounce. That meant (using round numbers for simplicity) that a 200-pound man would be worth $102,200.

No player made that much until 1949, when DiMaggio got the first $100,000 contract. Since he actually weighed only 193 pounds, worth $98,623, he was a few bucks ahead. Through the 1950s and 1960s, mild inflationary times, salaries kept rising slowly while gold remained fixed.

Only in 1972 was the official price raised to $38 and by then Hank Aaron

Slovakia: Dark History

Although the dissolution of the Czechoslovak state is sad for the Slovak people, it will at last remove the fig-leaf that Czechs have provided for a heinous Slovak history. Just as the election of Kurt Waldheim in Austria opened the world's eyes, so now the world may see that the Slovaks, unlike the Czechs, were not the victims of the Munich Pact. They joined the Axis powers, declared war on the United States, executed American prisoners, had the only European parliament to vote to expel Jews, and were the first, outside of Germany, to deport Jews to Auschwitz More than 60,000 were deported, 100 members of my family among them, and I was the only one from my family to return alive. A few years ago, my home town of Bardejov woo the Unesco prize as the most beautifully restored small city of Europe. The Slovaks restored everything except the synagogue, which is the oldest building in town (1670). It was only through Vaclav Havel's intervention last year, when he accompanied me to Bardejov, that s plaque was put on the synagogue to commemorate the deportation. The same year, Slovak nationalists were trying to restore the home of Josef Tiso, the wartime puppet-leader of Slova-kia, as a national monument.

Recently, on my return to Bardejov, I looked up my family in the local ar-chives; we were listed as "They left." The ex-Communist mayor assured me that it would be corrected. But nothing has been done. The nationalists, as well as many of their cohorts in the United States and Canada, celebrate March 14 as their Independence Day. It was the day Hitler gave them independence.

A Bush, er, a Baker . . .

Don't believe all the flap about bring-ing Secretary of State James Baker back to the White House to help President George Bush's re-election campaign: Mr. Baker doesn't believe in lost causes. The only way the Republicans might have a chance to win this year against the ever strengthening Clinton-Gore ticket is if Mr. Bush were to resign outright, throwing the convention open. Then Mr. Baker could come back as the candidate! He certainly has the popularity and the credentials: economic (as former secretary of Treasury), political (as a former campaign manager) and foreign policy (in his current position).

As a Texan he could even gather in former Perot supporters. Such a scenario would make this already strange election year even more interesting and exciting. And Mr. Baker's ego is just about big enough to let him go for it. But he would have to put his hopes for the Nobel Peace Prize on the back burner. Then again, let us hope not. EUGENE SCHULMAN.

Regarding the report "Democrats are Targets of Sharp Anacks" (July 23):

Marlin Fitzwater stigmatized Senator Al Gore, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, as "Mr. Sellout America." But Mr. Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, is paid by the taxpayers and not by the Republican National Committee. Unlike an elected official who makes a stupid political pronouncement and is subject to his constituents' votes. Mr. Fitzwater, a Bush pit bull, has no such leash. His statement was an improper use of the White House bully pulpit. This taxpayer does not want to subsidize Mr. Fitzwater's political activities.

ARIS — Can fashion's future ever be its past? That is the question raised as haute couture drops hemlines. Try as designers might to skirt the issue, most of the clothes sent out so far look either like costumes from an old movie, or just plain old.

Paris couture is not coming up with radical thinking on the new lengths. It is just trying familiar tricks: jackets longer and more fitted; skirts split at front or halck: knee-high boots; fancy hats and gloves. The result mostly looks like a revival of something lurking in the back of the memory — if not the closet.

And so it was at Dior. If Madame likes traditional couture in the modern manner - and the clients raved over it - Gianfranco Ferré bas just the combination of ice-cool tailoring with hot flashes of luxury. His Dior collections are always the same story: sleek suits thet look best with oarrow pants by day, and enough fabrie at night to drape all the windows of Buckingham Palace. Add this season some lean, stern skirts but only a token one-third) and a subtle and glowing olor palette of bois de rose through coral.

But Ferré adds a whole heap more, and be really needs to get rid of idees fixes that make his Dior designs - apart from the streamlined suits - look stuck in a time warp. Why does luxury have to be about wadges of fur and wafts of taffeta coat? Whose driver these days knows how to handle a train? Does volume have to mean a leather circle skirt with horsehair petticoats, and what do you do with all that on the plane? And why must models be haughty rather than Ferre has an architect's vision and a splendid studio, which made the most of the pure tailoring: a long signder gray flannel dress or a milk-white pantsuit, its acket carring up round the hips. There were also steek eyening clothes, like a sheath of black lace or a chinchilla coat shrugged over gray pants, tipped with apbroidery. The ehie line-up of Dior-clad front row lients — Paloma Picasso in organza blouse and pants, oan Collins in steel gray, Sandra di Portanova in mashine yellow, fvana Trump in sugar pink pantsuit were Ferre's most stylisb advertisement.

'So what is forward-looking fashion? Pierre Cardin embraced futurism 25 years ago and has been off on his own lunar trip ever since. He gave a sporty modernity to mid-calf coats (having a strong revival for fall) and long skirts, split at the front. They were shown In his exhaustingly inventive jackets - with cape

Scks. Chinese lantern sleeves or winged shoulders. Valentino steamed back to a mythical past when women had nothing to do but rearrange their Gioria Swanson tresses, smooth their skirts over their knees, Hake a cocktail or shake a leg on the dance floor. In a splendid piece of scene-setting, he recreated the night club on the S. S. Normandie where ritzy clients like Van Kempner, as well as designer Gianni Versace, sat to tiny tables sipping champagne while a singer rooned prewar melodies. Making her front row debut vas blonde 10-year-old Ivanka Trump, wearing Ammy's gold and black silk Versace shirt

The fashion message was spelled out in black and white: glamour for ever. Jackets were waisted and curvy, skirts were either long and full or slim-line breaking out perkily below the knees, and pantsuits exuded a Marlene Dietrich sensuality. Hats or 1940sstyle berets completed the Silver Screen picture. The dominant theme, inspired by the decoration of the Normandie, was graphie black and white checks, stripes and chevrons, all meticulously constructed by Valentino's Roman studios.

The work force had also beavered away at soft evening dresses made in panels of ribbons, jackets of tiny tueks cootouring the body, poured-on velvet sheath dresses with mermaid hemlines and the sort of ball dresses that fit snugly into a giant steamer trunk. The effect was of Hollywood style willed back to life with all the passion and technical skill Valentino could

It is a world away from the urban violence and ethnic conflicts that forward-looking designers reflect. Giancarlo Giametti, Valentino's partner, denies that the designer took a Sunday night slot without full consultation with the Chambre Syndicale, high fashion's ruling body. But the fact remains that Pierre Bérégovoy, the French prime minister, his wife, daughter and the upscale clientele of Nina Ricci, showing after Valentino, were kept waiting for an hour because of the knock-on effect of close-together shows, using the same models.

Ricci's Gerard Pipart is one of couture's unsung designers. He makes clothes to please clients and fit the house image: that meant for fall a sporty freshness by day and prettiness at night. The show majored on pants, especially curvy pantsuits under long coats, which is how most women will resolve the Great Hemline Debate. Pipart's conventional looks were given a whisper of the wild with crocodile markings, snake prints, bead-work looking like bird feathers and for in all its conventional deep-pile luxury.

EAN-LOUIS Scherrer is skillful at catching the fashion wind and taming it to a mild zephyr.

The savage, ethnic energy of tribal Africa comes out oo his runway as spicy browns mixed with black, as a panther-print dress slithering across the body, or in a jacket woven with leopards a-leaping. When he goes back to the boudoir for the lingerie look, there is the racy corset sculpted into a jeweled carapace, or black lace encrusted in discreet panels oo a simple white dress. Even the couture techniques themselves — the draping of a wisp of chiffon or botanical embroideries on lace — are delicate and refined. The clothes are conventional, but modern in their light-

But what about those long bemlines, done by Scherrer as mid-calf skirts, often spbt at the front, under a long fitted jacket, which is a good proportion. There were also mid-calf dresses in light silken fabrics that front-row client Isabelle d'Ornano decided was the prettiest way to handle long. She joined Scherrer's lunch party at L'Espadon at the Ritz, along with Pat Kennedy Lawford and Anne-Aymone Giscard d'Es-taing, who is holding a fashion first in November: a benefit in aid of disadvantaged children in the form of an auction sale of haute couture ontfits, donated by the couturiers and clients, and including a dress from the collection of the late Princess Grace of Monaco.

Open 24 hours a day and practi-cally abutting New York's cultural Ground Zero, the new million-dollar World Gym will bring to body building what Lincoln Center has long brought to the arts. It promises the best equipment that money can buy, and even a hint of stardom.

Arnold Schwarzenegger owns the World Gym franchise and is carrying on the principles of Gold's Gym, that meeca of body building in the mecca of bealth, Venice Beach, California. It was Joe Gold, the master muscle builder, who developed the modern gym. And it is now Schwarzenegger who is carry-ing the principle forward.

If fads followed the calendar, the fitness boom of the 1980s should have gone the way of junk bonds. The garden came back; so did the frumpy slipcover, even Jane Fonda started to look a little silly on her eternal quest for youth. Then the doctors weighed in and said all those aerobics and all that going for the burn might actually be bad for you.

The health-club culture crashed and burned. Like other bad investments of the 1980s, those born of hope and slipshod banking crumpled in a withered economy, leav-

Signs Good for Michelin To Continue on Its Roll

By Roger Cohen New York Times Service

ARIS - Michelin, the world's largest tire company, is not a stock that gives investors a comfortable ride. The company is notoriously secretive, making it difficult for analysts to make forecasts. And the swings in the company's price have been so extreme over the last five years that one French newspaper recently called it "the lunatic share."

But recently there has been good reason for the smile on the roly-poly Michelin man's face. The company's shares have climbed to 207.30 francs ($41.28), from a low of 57.35 francs in 1990. So far this year, the stock has gained 69.9 percent, while the CAC-40 index 0.6 percent below where it began 1992, Analysts believe the stock has further to climb. "The company has done a remarkable job of putring its house in order, and we believe a fair price for the share right now is nearer 280 francs," said Stephen Reitman, an analyst with UBS Philips & Drew in London.

Several factors bave constock's price should make a rights issue less onerous.

The surge in the

tributed to Michelin's turnaround after the company's unprecedented loss of 4.81 billion francs in 1990. Michelin, based in Clermont-Ferrand in central France, has imposed a radical cost-cutting program and eliminated more than 16,000 jobs in the last two years. At the same time, it has benefited from a fall in cost of raw materials, increasingly efficient production systems and the successful introduction of higher prices.

indeed, in the replacement tire market, which accounts for over two-thirds of sales, Michelin has been able to lift prices over 15 percent in the last year, considerably helping its margins.

"Tire companies, which lost $1 billion in 1991, just got tired of losing money, and they've been able to push prices up," said John Longhurst, an analyst at James Capel & Co., who noted Goodyear

Tire & Rubber Co. has also performed well over the last two years. ICHELIN TRIMMED its losses to 699 million francs last year, and analysts predicted it would return to profit this year, with earnings in the 1.7 billion-franc range. Mr. Reitman said he believed profit would reach 2.7 billion francs in 1993.

Still, problems remain. The company incurred huge debt in its 1990 acquisition of the United States tire maker Univoyal-Goodrich, and, despite some reduction, debt at the end of 1991 still stood at 27.8 billion francs.

"The company's borrowing is high, and there has been concern over this," said Robert Barber, an analyst at James Capel.

At the annual shareholders' meeting in April, the company's finance director, Eric Bourdais de Charbonnière, suggested that Michelin intended to cut its debt through a rights issue Analysts believe the company may seek to raise about 4 billion francs through a one-for-five issue priced at 200 francs.

But Michelin has not said when the issue will take place or on what terms, Even the division of the company's capital within the Michelin family remains a secret.

Some uncertainty thus hangs over the shares, with investors concerned over the potential dilutive effect of the proposed rights issue. "I doubt we'll see more upward movement until after the issue," said Mr. Longhurst of James Capel.

The recent surge in the stock price should make it less onerous for the company to improve the balance sheet through an issue, and dilution of the stock may be avoided if interest costs can be cut sufficiently.

Analysis remain favorably impressed by the company's overall performance and outstanding record in the development of new tire technology. Michelin is now starting to market a "green tire" that the company says reduces friction with the road surface by 35 percent and can reduce fuel consumption by 5 percent. Moreover, the company is working on a new production process that it says will slash production times and improve flexibility.

"All tire companies are looking for efficient cost-cutting methods and improved quality," said Philip Ayton, an analyst at Barclays de Zoete Wedd. "But Michelin seems to be making the

EC Crafts Agreement On Excise, VAT Rates

By Charles Goldsmith International Herald Tribune

BRUSSELS - The European Community on Monday reached agreement on the broad outlines of a deal to set minimum excise and value-added taxes, an essential step toward abolition of tax frontiers in the EC's post-1992 single market.

Britain, which went along last year with a "political agreement" that VAT should be at least 15 percent, resisted an indefinite legal commitment to such a figure, but reluctantly agreed to such a binding minimum rate until Dec. 31, 1996. Before that date arrives.

Eyes on West, Turkey Strives to Cure Boom, Bust

By Tom Buerkle International Herold Tribone

ISTANBUL - After years of wavering on the fault line between Europe and Asia, Turkey now sees its economic and strategic interests tied more closely with the West as a result of the Gulf War and the collapse of the former Soviet Union.

But the greater confidence about Turkey's role in the world has put the government's economic policy under a harsh spotlight. Businessmen and economists are urging stern measures to rein in the country's runaway budget deficit, 60 percent inflation and interest rates of more than 100 percent. Such steps are critical, they say, to raising domestic and foreign investment and putting the boom-and-bust economy on a sustainable growth track.

"Our economy needs a major structural readjustment rather than minor improvements in running the economy," said Bulent trialists' and Businessmen's Association. The cratic institutions in a secular state.

"Turkey has a vital role in the reshaping of the world," said linur Cevik, editor of the Turkish Daily News and a personal advisor to Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel. "We want to be a link to enhance stability in the area."

Last month, Ankara brought together leaders of 11 countries in the Black Sea region, including Russia, Ukraine, Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan and Greece, to sign an economic cooperation accord.

But unlike the previous government, officials today see regional cooperation not as a Western relief efforts for Kurds in northern Iraq have strengthened its strategic role as a substitute for the long-delayed goal of joining the European Community but as "complementary," a way to gain leverage from the Check simportance as a crux of stability in a troubled region, as well as a role model for the fledgling requisitor. Turkey least a decade away, but it remains the overriding goal.

"We do realize if we want to become a developed country in a true sense, we have to compete with Europe," said Zeynep Turkeri, general manager of TEB Research, the securities arm of Turk Ekonomi Bankasi AS in Istanbul. "If we turn our attention to the East, we will lower our standards."

The potential of the new role as a bridge to the former Soviet Union was underscored earlier this month when Birlesmis Muhen-disler Burosu AS signed an $11.7 billion deal to develop energy projects in Kazakhstan.

The potential also has caught the eye of Western business. Despite the Gulf War, for-eign direct investment rose more than 20 percent last year, to $960 million, and economists expect at least $1 billion this year. Bluechip investors include Philip Morris Cos., which recently broke ground for an estimated $200 million tobacco processing plant, and Toyota Motor Co., which is preparing to build a $300 million auto assembly plant.

CIA Sees Export Rise For China

WASHINGTON - China's market-oriented reforms are likely : s to fuel the country's export drive, standarding its trade imbalance with the United States and other trade ippartners, the Central intelligence er Agency said Monday.

The CIA believes the U.S. trade, its deficit with China will exceed $15 on billion this year, up from $12.7 bil-lion in 1991, said an agency analyst. to Martin Petersen in testmony pro-Martin Petersen, in testimony pro-before the Senate soon. Beijing's reform efforts "may widen China's trade imbalance: with some of its key partners, particularly the United States," Mr. Petersen said, noting that imports from China grew at a 41 percent annual rate in the first five months of this year. Mr. Petersen said China's exports were growing rapidly in part because Chinese and American traders were accelerating deliveries as a hedge against China's losing most-favored-nation status or being hit with trade sanctions.

Other factors, he said, were the shifting of more resources into production of light todustrial goods increased government incentives and growth of foreign investment.

Mr. Petersen predicted economic reform would ultimately produce pressure for political change. Workers may not be willing to accept the added unemployment and inflation risks that go with a market economy without demanding greater input to the political process," he

SAN FRANCISCO — In his home in the heart of Silicon Valley, Charles Farnham, a software writer, has a remarkably complete collection of commercial programs for his Apple Macintosh computer. Like millions of other people, Mr. Farnham bas not bought many of them; he has copied his friends' software instead. U.S. law is clear that in almost all cases it is illegal to make duplicate copies of software. But that does not seem to faze many computer users. People who would not steal a book or cheat on a test seem to have no quaims about obtaining software illegally.

"If I feel good about a product I'll buy it," Mr. Farnham said, "But first I want to decide whether a program is really worth 500 bucks." Some people acknowledge that using unbeensed software is wrong but say they have no fear of being caught; some say the software is often flawed and they want to test it before they buy it.

Most frequently, people who illegally use software say the industry makes such huge profits from its corporate customers that individ-uals should be free to help themselves. Taken together, these rationalizations and excuses reflect a widespread attitude that electronic information is, in effect, in the public domain and should not be protected as private property.

The software industry estimates that $2.4 billion worth of their products in the United States and Canada — almost half the total of $5.7 billion in sales —was stolen in 1990. Although the industry remains hugely profitable and competitive, some specialists say the amount of theft reduces the incentives for developing programs. But software creators are trying to light back. Last year, the Software Publishers Association, a trade group, conducted 75 raids, sent 561 warning letters and filed 33 lawsuits against organizations and individuals it suspected of software piracy. But the laws are rarely enforced against individuals. In June, the FB1 raided a comouter bulletin board known as Davey Jones's Locker after a complaint by the association. The bulletin board, run out of a house in Millbury, Massachusetts, offerred more than 200 commercial the case.

Far more common than such organized activities is the exchange of Noppy discs among friends.

"A person's feelings of closeness to a friend take priority over some abstract ethical principle," said Carol Gould, a philosophy profes-sor at the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, New Jersey, who has written on the subject of ethics and computers. When software for a wide variety of business and personal uses became easy to buy, it ignited the personal computer revolution in the early 1980s. At first, many software companies protected their programs by building in codes that made them impossible to copy. But customers complained loudly, and as it became common for personal computers to have hard disks, the sale of protected software ended. This was because tive director of the Software Publishers Association, which is based in Washington.

Most large American corporations, government agencies and schools have strict rules that prohibit copying software - even when employees are trying only to make their work easier. Yet illegal sharing of software is a rapidly growing phe-nomenou and a widely accepted practice by the millions of people who use personal computers at work, at school, or in their homes. The situation is far worse in countries where there is no tradition of protecting intellectual property, software industry executives said. A recent survey in Germany, for example, determined that there are fewer software programs purchased than computers - a certain indication that piracy is widespread.

The Business Software Alliance, buyers needed to be able to copy an international trade group, estimate programs, which are sold on floppy disks, onto their hard disks.

There was a battle over copy amount equal to total worldwide protection between the software in- software sales.

German Bank Profit Growth to Slow

FRANKFURT — Germany's three largest banks are expected to report slower profit growth for the first half of 1992 than in the like 1991 period because of narrowing interest rate margins and rising costs.

Operating profit, however, will still be underpinned by strong trading results, buoying the reputation of the banks as some of Germany's steadiest corporate performers.

Some analysts predicted operating profit at Dentsche Bank AG, Dresdner Bank AG and Commerzbank AG were all bound to show rises but that improvement in partial operating profit - net earnings from interest and commi business minus operating costs - was less Commerzbank is due to release half-year results on Wednesday, while Dresdner and Deutsche Bank results are due next week.

"In view of the worsening trading conditions, bank earnings were good again in the first half, said Uwe Zeidler, bank analyst at Trinkaus & Burkhardt. But Mr. Zeidler saw the first signs of a slowdown in demand for credit as economic growth in Germany begins to taper off.

"Deutsche's profit growth will be a slow 5 to 7 percent, with income from interest business still fine, but with costs still rising faster than expected," said an analyst.

Analysts said they expected Dresdner to show a rise in partial operating profit of about DM.

10 percent and Commerzbank to report an increase of between 8 and 14 percent.

After the first four months of 1992, Commerzbank's partial operating profits were up 9 percent. Deutsche Bank gave no partial operating profits, but its group operating profits were up 10 percent. Dresdner Bank does not release Group partial operating profit had risen 11.8 percent, to 2.46 billion Deutsche marks 151.66 billion) at Deutsche Bank in the first half of 1991 from the year-earlier period.

Dresdner posted a rise of 12 percent to 1.07 billion DM in the same time period and Commerzbank climbed 33.1 percent to 813 million

By contrast, American companies are just starting to roll, particularly in such politically risky and unstable places as Russia, Poland, and the soon-to-be-divided Czechoslovakia. Until recently, U.S. investment in the region had largely gone into Hungary, the pioneer of market ac-tivities in the Soviet bloc.

In Czechoslovakia, for example, Kmart Corp. is putting $118 million into the Prior & Maj department store chain, while Teepak Inc. is spending $27 million to acquire the Cutisin sausage-casing firm.

industry on Monday forecast the loss of 40,000 jobs this year and no return to growth before 1993, dealing a blow to hopes of a quick end to

The Building Employers Confederation, reporting on a survey of 600 companies, said nearly onefifth of them were working at less than half capacity. It estimated the industry had lost about 260,000 jobs since the middle of 1989.

The survey reported declining output in second quarter 1992, but said the fall would be less dramatic.

The report coincided, however, with a forecast by National Westminster Bank that said unemploy-ment in the southeast of England, including London, would rise 18 percent, to almost one million, by cepted his nomination of David Rowland to succeed him.

Mr. Rowland, chairman of the Sedgwick Group PLC insurance brokerage, led the task force whose report on the future of Lloyd's was published in January.

Mr. Coleridge's decision was widely expected and was greeted with applause at the meeting, which was called by members to voice dissent against the governing body.

Lloyd's last month posted losses totaling £2 billion ($3.8 billion) for 1989, the latest year of account. Lloyd's attributed the losses to various natural disasters, but investors blamed lax regulation.

Claud Gurney, one of the members, accused Lloyd's of "bungling ineptitude" and "widespread malpractice."

Lloyd's members, who are known as names, will vote next month on whether to accept the task force's recommendations.

One recommendation debated Monday includes the "formal recognition of the primacy of names' rights," and a plan for Lloyd's members "to make a substantial financial contribution to the problem of distressed names."

Another resolution would require the Lloyd's governing council to develop a plan that would effectively release some members from liabilities on years where accounts have not yet been closed.

Another would require the coun-cil to rescind its decision to impose a 1.66 percent levy on members as part of its drive to reassure policyholders by doubling its central fund, to £1 billion.

Oil Search to Cost Up to $2 Billion

HANOI — British Petroleum Co., which will have spent $90 million looking for oil in Victnam by the end of 1992, expects to spend an additional $150 million on its nest phase of explorations, a com-pany executive said Monday.

John Browne, managing director and chief executive officer of London-based BP Exploration, said the company could eventually spend a total $2 billion in Vietnam if it struck oil He said Vietnam had encouraging oil potential, despite a total of 18 dry wells drilled by foreign com-panies there since the late 1980s.

The Vietnamese-Russian joint venture Vietsovpetro pumped 3.94 million metric tons (27.6 million barrels) of crude last year from Bach Ho, Vietnam's only producing oil field. It expected to produce 5.4 million tons in 1992.

BP, which is exploring in Vietnam with Norway's state oil company Statoil, has drilled two wells off central Vietnam's coast and has exploration rights in other areas. Ian Vann, the company's general manager for international exploration, said Vietnam was believed to have significant oil, although less than the North Sea or Alaska. ■ Japanese Aid Resumption

Japan aims to end the deadlock over millions of dollars in old debts owed to it by Vietnam and resume aid to the country by the end of this year, Reuters reported from Tokyo.

A Foreign Ministry official refused to disclose the exact sum of the debts but said Hanoi has repaid only a portion of them.

Japan extended loans totaling 27.73 billion yen ($218.9 million at the current exchange rate) to South Vietnam between 1970 and 1974. Aid was halted when Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1978.

Foreign Brokers' Methods Rile Japan

TOKYO - Japanese officials are angry over the strategies that foreign brokerages are using to profit from the drop in the Tokyo stock market. But foreign traders say the officials are just looking for someone to blame for the market's decline.

"If Japanese stocks were a bargain, people would be buying like crazy," said John Doyle, a trader at Maruso Securities in Tokyo. "If you throw diamonds on the street, people will run out and pick them up. Believe me, the Japanese market isn't a bargain."

"I don't think it's fair to blame arbitrage operators for making the market go up or down," said Peter Rawle, an analyst at Smith New Court PLC, "You have to blame the people who have been buying or selling fu-

"Japanese investors have chosen not to buy Japanese equities," he said.

The recent sharp drop in stock prices could open foreign houses to new criticism. The Nikkei average, Japan's closely watched gauge of the stock market, has fallen 10 percent in two weeks. Traders said that during the latest round of declines, arbitrage and short selling were prominent.

Those two trading techniques - shorting stocks, or selling borrowed shares and buying them back at lower prices, and futures arbitrage, or trading to profit from pricing differences between stock and futures markets -

But foreign traders, who have honed the skills needed to profit from stock declines in their home markets, are slowly forcing the Japanese to update their rule book.

face up to the fact that their market isn't a stock market in the Western sense," Mr. Doyle said. Mr. Doyle, who joined Maruso when it decided to adopt rather than fight foreign trading strategies, blames the stock declines on a reluctance among investors to buy at current price levels, rather than oo shorting or arbitrage.

While the foreign brokerage firms have been caping huge profits, Japanese houses have racked up their biggest losses in 28 years. In the year ended March 31, the Japanese branches of the U.S. companies Salomon Brothers Inc., Goldman, Sachs & Co. and Morgan Stanley & Co. showed higher profits than all Japanese brokerages except Nomura Securities Co. and Daiwa Securities Co.

But the complaints are louder among officials than from Japanese traders, who are slowly adapting to the new practices.

When the Nikkei average dropped 14 per-cent from April 1 to April 10, the Japan Securities Dealers Association blamed it on short selling by foreign brokerages. The association charged that foreign houses were aggressively selling Japanese bank stocks from fund managers and life insurers, driving down prices, and then buying them back at a profit.

The Finance Ministry responded by pressuring Japanese insurers not to lend to other investors, particularly foreigners. True, foreigners were shorting stocks in April, said Shigeru Akiba, a trading director at UBS Philips & Drew International, but they were quickly joined by Japanese firms.

The rules to limit arbitrage have been more severe. Foreign securities houses account for about 70 percent of arbitrage activity in Japan. The Finance Ministry and stock exchange officials said arbitrage trading has exaggerated stock declines. The Tokyo and Osaka exchanges have responded by raising commissions and margins and by ordering increased disclosure on arbitrage-related trading.

Foreign traders said the stronger regulations were well-intentioned but misplaced.

Foreign investors in fact buy more than they sell. Mr. Rawle of Smith New Court said. Foreigners bought a net $9.4 billion of Japanese stocks in the first half of 1992. Japanese corporate and institutional investors, meanwhile, have been net sellers so far this year.

Thai Air Falls Below Offer Price

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches BANGKOK - Shares in Thai Airways International tumbled below their offering price in the third day of trading on Monday, depress-ing the Bangkok stock exchange and leading some analysts to look for government support of the stock.

Shares in the national airline, which was listed on Thursday and accounts for about 7.2 percent of the market's capitalization, fell 5.5 baht, to 55.5 baht ($2.20), below the initial offering price of 60 baht. Traders said the shares fell because of an expected 20 percent drop in tourism this year.

The Bangkok exchange's SET in-dex fell 11.22 points, or 1.5 percent,

The government, which still controls 93 percent of the airline's eqnty through the Finance Ministry, cannot afford to let the stock fall more, said Suppachai Ekkul, vice president of Nithipat Capital, or it will have trouble listing other state-owned companies.

Other analysts, however, said the government was unlikely to sup-port the price of Thai Airways by buying back shares. "There's no point, said Teerawai Jongtaweephol, an analyst at Capital Securities & Finance, "It's healthier to let the market determine the price. After all, we're talking about a company with excellent long-term growth prospects, especially ooce the military's influence is reduced." (Bloomberg, AFP)

■ Singapore Air Shares Up Singapore Airlines shares surged in heavy trading on Monday, taking the stock market with it, on news of the company's proposed one-forone bonus issue, Agence France-

Presse reported from Singapore. The airline's local shares rose to 13,70 Singapore dollars ($8.48), up I dollar from Friday. Its foreign shares were unchanged, at 17.20 dollars. The Straits Times industrial index climbed 21,03 points, or 1.5

percent, to 1,422.34. The one-for-one bonus issue surprised shareholders, who had expected at best to receive one bonus share for every five they held.

Playoff in U.S. Women's Golf Open By Jaime Diaz

New York Times Service
OAKMONT. Pennsylvania — Reacting to an 11th-hour lightning delay as if she had been electrified with inspiration, Patty Sheehan birdied the final two holes to tie Juli Inkster after 72 holes of the 47th U.S. Women's Open. They will face each other in an 18-hole playoff Monday.

Two shots back after three-put-ting the par-3 16th, Sheehan ap-peared to be a beaten player when U.S. Golf Association officials suddenly halted play Sunday because of lightning as the two players walked off the 17th tee.

When play resumed, Sheehan immediately hit a sand wedge from 65 yards to within 10 feet on the 285-yard, par-4 17th.

JOHANNESBURG - Jubilation at the arrival in South Africa of the New Zealand All Blacks, the first official touring rugby side in eight years, was tempered on Monday by warnings of impending defeat for the home team.

"We must prepare ourselves to lose," said South Africa's rugby chief, Danie Craven, when asked about South Africa's chances in the test against the All Blacks on Aug. 15. "Our players are not nearly as fit as the All Blacks or the Wallabies. Our iorwards are very weak

Most observers echoed Craven's pessimism, saying the South Africans would be unprepared to take on the two strongest teams in world rugby. They face Australia, the 1991 World Cup champion, a week after pfaying the All Blacks, the 1987 World Cup champion. The All Blacks arrived on Sunday night to tumultuous welcome on the first official visit by a New Zealand team since 1976, when South Africa won the series. England toured in 1984, and the Springboks went to New Zealand in 1981 for a tour marked hy anti-apartheid protests. The New Zealanders play the first match of their tour on Saturday in Durban against Natal, one of the strongest provincial sides.

On Aug. 5, the All Blacks face Oran

State, on Aug. 8 they play the Junior Boks in Pretoria, and on Aug. 10 they meet the Central

Village Game Room Is Hottest Cool Place

By William Drozdiak

Washington Post Service

BARCELONA — Down at the bowling alley, the competition was hot and heavy. A couple of Swedish women were screaming at their male compatriot for throwing a gutter ball and blowing the match. Over at the Terminator Man video game, Zaire and Burkina Faso were locked in close combat at about 6.000 points apiece, Meanwhile, a Kenyan athlete was pleading for help after getting stuck upside down in the

The recreation room has already become one of the most popular places to fraternize for the 10,000 ethletes staying at the seaside Olympic Village. Even though fresh sand was dumped along five kilometers (three miles) of the coast as part of the renovation drive for the Olympics, the local authorities have been disappointed to see so few of the athletes frolicking on their private beach.

The hot and humid weather has forced most of the ethletes to seek air-conditioned comfort in the game rooms between their practice workouts and medal competitions. Word also got around about the Mediterranean's pollution. In the days before the Games, a few sailors and intrepid swimmers complained about the foul water, which was found to be 10 times dirtier than the limit set for minimal bygiene by the European Community. So much for a global reprise of "Beach Blanket Bingo."

The athletes' cafeteria is jammed throughout the long sweltering afternoons, when most Spaniards enjoy their interminable lunches or succe away the heat with a siesta. A vast buffet of international foods is laid on to keep all the athletes happy and feeling at home: heaping plates of lasagna and spaghetti for Italians and carbo-loading Americans, kimchee, or pickled cabbage, for the Koreans and smoked fish for the Nordic teams.

The Village disco comes alive at about 11 P.M. and stays open until dawn for those who don't bother with curfews. The atmosphere is relaxed and congenial. So far the real world's political tensions have not spoiled the mood. The Olympic protocol office has taken pains to keep a

For Karolyi, the Last Campaign?

He has not alweys satisfied everyone along the way. More than a few people have been put off by his brashness, including parents of children who did not achieve their goals or federation officials who balk at his frequent criticisms or rival coaches who cannot generate the same success or attention. But the results of his work were always there to measure against others, and none of his contemporaries has been more successful. Three members of the current team are from his gym - Zmeskal, Kern Strug and Betty Okino.

"I certainly know, I can state right now as I am entering my sixth Olympic Games, I have done everything humanly possible to help develop American gymnastics," he said. "But no matter what the results, I'm still going to sit down and make a decision that's right for myself, the spon and my family, too. Jacki imagined no shortage of possibilities

Somalia — A Team Without a Country

By Michael Janofsky New Tork Times Service

BARCELONA - Hours before the opening ceremonies of the Barleg found a stress fracture and prepared to place the leg in a cast. Bile objected. I have to walk in opening ceremonies," he said. "If I cannot run, I must walk."

Reluctantly, the doctor agreed to wrap the leg tightly in a handage so Bile, once the world's leading 1,500-meter runner, could march proudly behind the flag of Somalia in the parade of nations here.

In a real sense, however, the tiny group of men who waved to the crowd when Somalie was introduced were representing a memory more than a country. After years of economic decay, drought, starva-tion, revolution and tribal warfare, Somalia barely exists in any formal sense. U.S. Has the Goods On Taiwan's Pitcher

By Dave Anderson New York Times Service

BARCELONA -At the end of the U.S. Olympic baseball team's dugoot, the scouting report on Taiwan's starting pitcher, left-hander Chen-Jung Lo, was taped to the wall.

"Tries to get hitters to chase bad balls early in the count," it read in part next to three photos of his delivery. "Make him get the ball up. Does not have a true strikeout pitch. Be patient."

Ron Fraser, the U.S. coach, received that report from two scouts dispatched to Beijing to inspect the Taiwan team in last year's Asian Games, And true to the report, during the second iming Monday Lo got high with his pitches, especially a change-up that Chad McConnell, the right fielder recently drafted in the first round by the Philadelphia Phillies, smashed for a three-run homer that started a

"Our pitches didn't hold," Fraser said later, "but our hitters did what they had to do to win."

Phil Nevin, the third baseman selected by the Houston Astros as the first choice in the recent draft, drove in three runs with a homer and two doubles. McConnell also had two singles. Charles Johnson, the catcher taken by the Florida Marlins, had three singles and centerfielder Jeffrey Hammonds, the Baltimore Orioles' first choice,

"This was the first close intense game we've had," Nevin said. The best game we've had for the overall mentality of team unity."
In the first official gold-medal Olympic baseball tournament, the U.S. team is now 2-0, along with Cuba, an I8-1 victor Monday over

After Tuesday's game against Italy, the American team will play Cuba on Wednesday in its first crucial test. In seven pro-Olympic games with the Cubans, the Americans lost five.

But even if Fraser's team were to lose to both Cuba and Japan, victories over each of its five other opponents would qualify it for the four-team medal round next Tuesday and Wednesday.

"That's why this Tapei game was so important to us," said right-hander Rick Greene, the Detroit Tigers' first-round choice. "We couldn't let this one get away."

Greene and Darren Dreifort almost did. When Greene replaced starter Ron Villone in the sixth, he walked three consecutive batters. forcing in the run that narrowed the U.S. lead to 7-5. After Nevin's two-run homer helped create a 10-5 lead, Dreifort surrendered a three-run homer to Knang-Shih Wang in a four-run seventh before retiring the last seven batters in order.

"Darren's our No. I guy in the builpen," Fraser said. "He closes it. He stayed out there and got it done."

Seven of the Taiwan players once appeared in the Little League World Series in Williamsport, Peonsylvania, including Chien-Fu Kno Lee, who had three strikeouts in obtaining the last seven outs. Nevin assessed his split-fingered fastball as "one of the best I've seen." No scouting report had been posted on him.

Spain Gets First Gold as Cyclist Sets Olympic Mark

BARCELONA - José Moreno of Spain won the host country's first gold medal of the Summer Games on Monday with an Olympic record in the one-kilometer cyding time trial.

Moreno finished in 1 minute,

Moreno, 23, the defending world champion, circled the track after his victory with his right fist raised to a frantic crowd of 3,500. He was the last of 32 riders and the crowd cheered him on londer and louder with each lap, then gave him a five-minute standing ovation when he eclipsed the Olympic re-cord of 1:03.91 set by France's Pierre Trentin in Mexico in 1968.

Dream Team Stifles Kukoc And Croatians

By Ian Thomsen International Herald Tribune BARCELONA - They have to get themselves excited about some-thing. To Toni Kukoc's detriment, he was the something.

At 6 feet, 9 inches (2.08 meters),
Kukoc is said to be the Magic Johnson of Europe. Well, said Dream Team guard Scottie Pippen, as he bellied up to Kukoc defensively, I know Magic Johnson. I, said Pippen as he sprinted circles around Kukoc, played against Magic Johnson. You, announced Pippen, while outscoring Kukoc 13-2 in the decimate for the left of Team USA's 103sive first half of Team USA's 103-70 victory over Croatia on Monday night — are no Magic Johnson.

Before unraveling the history of Pippen's trans-Atlantic rivalry with Kukoc, it should be noted that the real Magic Johnson played only four minutes before planting his right leg and feeling something "pull or pop" behind his right knee. He felt "no real discomfort or pain," he said, and he even jogged a little bit to test himself, but he could not hide the limp in his walk.

Asked how he would feel about missing the rest of the Olympics after participating in only one full game — the U.S. victory Sunday over Angola — Johnson said: "It would be a big disappointment. You know I wanted to be ont there, especially tonight."

Among all of the causes the Americans have been able to conjure up out of thin air, Pippen's struggle with Kukoc might have been the gravest. During the 1990-91 National Basketball Association season, the Chicago Bulls refused to renegotiate Pippen's contract, preferring to spend the money on Kukoc. When Kukoc signed a re-ported four-year, $12 million deal with Benetton Treviso of Italy, only then did the Bulls raise Pippen's salary to the superstar level.

Though the Bulls won the NBA's next two championships, Pippen and teammate Michael Jordan still needed Kukoc - for inspiration. By game time everyone on the team Press reported:

knew the wrongs perpetrated, how-ever unknowingly, by Kukoc. Pippen may never have guarded any-one so closely in his life.

"I've never seen that kind of de-fense before," said Kukoc, who finished the night with seven turn-overs and 4 points on 2-for-8-shooting. "For tonight I think four points is enough. After tonight I know I have to work on all parts of my game."

"Scottie and Michael, they really wanted this," Johnson said, "Jerry Krause had been ranting and raving about this guy," he added, referring to the Bulls' owner. "They wanted to find out, because they'd been hearing about this guy. We all did. But you can't judge him off this. He never played against some-thing like this." The United States held Croatia without a field goal for 10:52 as it built a 32-13 lead. The Croatians responded behind the energy of Drazen Petrovic (19 points), whose quickness has improved as a result of playing in the NBA. They came within 13 early in the second half before the United States, by now a little bored with their treatment of the obviously overwhelmed Kukoc, cruised to several picturesque fastbreak dunks.

"We just considered this a practice, because we knew we had no chance to win," said Croatian cen-ter Dino Radja. "We didn't think of this game as a real game. We were just going to play, run a little bit, sweat a little bit. We have more important games than this."

Kukoc, meanwhile, declared his intention to join the NBA - the Bulls maintain rights to him -- for the 1993-94 season, Jordan declared that he would welcome Kukoc to the Bulls.

"I hold no animosity against Toni Kukoc," Pippen said. Then, speaking of the Bulls' general man-ager, he added: "But then I couldn't put Jerry Krause on the

B ARCELONA — They stay in a brand new hotel where they are the only guests, and the street is blocked off by security police. They have escorts and protection wherever they go. When they do show up at a public function, like the opening ceremonies, they create a sensation. They are photographed and ogled and beseached for their autographs. Crowds envelop them; all you can see are their heads, overhanging the swell like Chinese lanterns.

They are the hottest ticket in town. Scalpers think of them as manna from heaven. Sportswriters who routinely cover their games now need special credentials; hundreds of reporters are denied Vantage seats at the games, Point and have no alternative but to watch on television. When their games tip off here, thousands of flashbulbs pop like fireflies, glittering through the gym like at a Hollywood premiere.

I used to cover basketball. Now, I cover The Beatles.

I have come 180 degrees on the "Dream Team." In the beginning I was opposed to them for all the right reasons: Their games were going to be slaughters—like Sunday's 68-point torching of Angola. There'd be no drama, no competition. It wouldn't be sports, but a pointless exhibition. And we didn't need them. Had we taken the usual route and sent a college team, we'd have won handily. No team would have threatened one with Shaquille O'Neal, Alonzo Mourning, Christian Laettner, Jimmy Jackson, Grant Hill and Chris

Then I saw them play.

I love them, yeah, yeah, yeah.

We have never seen their like before in any sport.

They are giants on the earth, playing basketball in its Platonic form. Watching them bolt down the court at full speed — Ewing grabbing a rebound, outletting the ball to Magic, who gives it to Bird on the wing, who flips it back to Magic in the middle, who looks left to Malone, then delivers it the opposite way, no look, to Jordan for a soaring, tongue-wagging, double-pump, jacknife jam—is like watching Brando in "A Streetcar Named Desire." Fascinating Inspiring Mesmerizing.

During the Tournament of the Americas in Portland, Oregon, some people said they could not watch the U.S. team for more than a half; they found themselves bored with the antiseptic excellence. I watched every single moment. I couldn't get enough of them. I still resent the hype, but I appreciate how the product exceeds the claims.

mention the stern approbation of Barkley's "That was very bad for us imagewise," said David

Robinson. Barkley, who is currently atop the leaderboard in the Ugly American standings, dismissed the incident by telling reporters: "He hit me. I hit him. You guys just don't understand that. It's a ghetto thing."

Barkley's rough-and-tumble act, which is so well known that even Angola's coach waved it off as normal for him in the NBA," will no doubt give succor to the politically correct yelp that by sending this team, the United States is bullying the rest of the world.

But had anybody asked the rest of the world, they would have learned the opposite was true. Players resolutely welcome the opportunity to play against the best in the world.

"We want to play the Americans at their very best," said Brazil's Marcel de Souza. "We want to play Bird and Magic and Jordan."

The swimmer Mike Barrowman said he spoke for most of the U.S. athletes when he said: "This is the Olympics, not the NBA championship. You have to keep the two separate. I love these guys. I want them to go out and kill everybody. But this is our chance to come through for our country. We only get that chance once every four years. They get it every day."

And, as Jordan conceded after the Angola game, it has also been whispered that the team sets itself above the other athletes, and belittles the Olympic spirit by the other athletes, and belittles the Olympic spirit by staying apart from the athletes' village.

Simpler logic aside, the reality is that it is impossible for the Dream Team to live in the village. They wouldn't get a moment's peace. All you needed for proof was to watch the opening ceremonies. Magic was clearly the brightest star in the Barcelona night. Standing with seven of his teammates at the front of the U.S. delegation, Magic was photographed, kissed, hugged and high-fived by marching athletes. Rezzilian, French and Chinese athletes stood on each other's shoulders to see him. Members of the U.S. team asked. shoulders to see him. Members of the U.S. team asked to be photographed with him. The joyous logiam around Magic and the other Dreamers regularly backed up the official procession, as athletes ap-proached them reverentially — perhaps hoping some of their luster would rub off. And this was without Bird or Jordan in attendance. Had they been there, the thing might still be going on.

Of course they're not staying in the village.

They're way beyond the village. They're way beyond the Olympics.

I'm telling you, they're The Beatles.

That's the real humor of the game, and from time to time you'll get a bracing whiff of it in this anthology. More often, though, what its editors have given us is baseball humor of another, more problematical variety: the writings of those who do not play the game but observe it from the stands or the press box.

Dick Schaap and Mort Gerberg are of this persuasion. Schaap is a reformed newspaper sportswriter who now covers the game on television; Gerberg is a cartoonist and illustrator. Both are New Yorkers, and both clearly — or dimly — view the game through Gothamite glasses. Not merely are some 60 of the anthology's pages devoted to the New York Mets, but so many others are turned over to the Yankees, Giants and Dodgers that the book would be more accurately sub-titled "The Big Book of New York Base-

By Ian Thomsen ional Herald Tribune

BARCELONA - The world was turned around and up and down on Monday by a 13-year-old girl who leaped out over the city like a tumbling moon and disappeared into the water like a pebble.

Fu Mingria will celebrate her 14th birthday next month by eating ice cream — "I like eating lots of ice cream," she said — and listening to Madonna. Fu, who sees her parents twice a year and doesn't know how they earn a living, who flings herself off of a three-story platform writhing as if she's m a straigacket and always, always frees her arms in time to silently break her fall, became the second youngest gold medalist in Olympic history.

[Fu is not the youngest champion, but she's close. The Associated Press reported.

She will be 14 on Aug. 16. The youngest woman to win a gold medal was Majorie Gestring of the United States, who was 13 years, 267 days old when she won in springboard diving in 1936. And an unknown boy who might have been as young as 7 was a coxswain on the winning Dutch pairs-with-cox shell in 1900.]

Fu's eight-dive total of 461.43 points from the 10meter platform was almost 50 better than the total of the Russian silver-medalist, Elena Mirochina, at 411.63. The same dynamics that have made gymnastic champions out of fringe adolescents brought out the best in Fu, who is not quite 5 feet tail (1.52 meters) nor 93 pounds (42 kilograms). Her size and coordination allow her to spin more easily than her elders. The Beijing diving school, where she has lived since she was 9, has toughened her with training sessions in driving rainstorms.

"The older you get, perhaps you gain a little more weight, and it is more difficult to dive," said Mirochina, 18. "It is more difficult for me to dive than it was four years ago."

The bronze medalist, Mary Ellen Clark of the United States, (401.91 points), at 29 diving in her first Olympics, was seated at the head table for a victory news conference when a mild disturbance arose in the audience. Amid dozens of middle-aged reporters sitting in classroom chairs walked Fu, shuffling down the aisle with her awkward equipment bag in front of her, moving toward the front of the room as if she was the new surprise teacher in an adult education classroom. She took a seat three places down from Clark, who has been diving for 22 years. Fu didn't even know how to swim when, at 8 years old, she was yanked out of a gymnastics program and taught to dive.

"If you see her practice, time and again, she just doesn't miss a lot," Clark said. But she declined to tie Fu's performance to her youth. "I should say that I am much better than when I was at 13 years old."

Pu, who won the six-dive preliminary on Sunday by more than 30 points, was in second place after the second and third dives Monday.

As the degree of difficulties increased, Fu's opponents thrashed about for the lesser medals. Clark held a 5-point lead for the silver when she toppled her entry, tumbling to fifth place with one dive left. Mirochina struck a back 14-somersault, 34-twist to singe past Fu's 15-year-old teammate, Jinhong Zhu, who landed her last attempt like a disabled plane to fall out of second place. Clark then struck a back 1½-somersault, 2½-twist to beat Zhu by 1.35 points.

no doubt aware, as was everyone else, of the contrast between her experience and that of the younger champion, whose lead grew with each of her final five dives.

I think Fu set a new standard for the degree of difficulty," said Clark's coach, Ron O'Brien. "It's similar to Greg Louganis in 1983 and '84, when he brought it up to a new level. Her degree of difficulty gives her a 25-30 point advantage before the contest starts. So, if she misses a dive, she's still even with the field." Sandwiched at the news conference between two trainers, Fu said her days were split between practice and schoolwork.

"I like looking at maps at school," she said. She has become the green symbol of China's 10-year commitment to the sport. Before 1984, China had never contended for an Olympic diving medal. This year, Chinese divers are favored to win three of the four gold medals, and by 1996 the country should move past Sweden (21 medals) into second place in Olympic diving history, though far behind the United States 123 medals.

The Chinese study X-rays of wrists to predict which divers will mature to the proper dimensions. Soon Fu, who from the platform last year became the youngest women's world champion in any aquatic event, will be old enough to earn an average workers' salary. Her bonus for this gold medal has been reported as $3,700.

At the full height of her childhood, which she can never capture again, Fu tip-tood to the edge of the board. With the city opening up to the left of her mountaintop perch, the pool below could not have been so intimidating. Not that she was ever in timidated. She held her breath, bent herself down and tossed herself off the side, the wind feathering her short black hair. The secret of her enormous success is that she appeared light enough, but for the wings, to fly out over the city, away.

Tamas Darnyi of Hungary set a record in the 400-meter individual medley.

Age and persistence were re-warded on the second day of the swimming competition, U.S. swimmers took their second and third gold medals of the Games when Morales won the 100-meter butterfly and Nicole Haislett made up for a poor performance the day before with a come-from-behind victory in in the 200-meter freestyle.

Hungary captured its second swimming gold when Tamas Dar-nyi, the world-record holder, won the 400-meter individual medley over Erie Namesnik of the United States. Kyoko Iwasaki of Japan, 14, caught Nail in the last lap to win the 200 breaststroke, in which Nall bolds the world record. She ended up finishing third. Morales, the world-record hold-

Winning the gold medal is a dream come true," he said, "but in life we don't always realize our goals and things we dream about don't always come true, right?"

In 1984, at the Los Angeles Games, Morales broke his own world record — but lost the gold medal. West Germany's Michael Gross blew past him in the final 10 meters and stole the gold, with Morales settling for the silver.

He finished up at Stanford and tried for the 1988 team, only to end up third. Only two swimmers make the team in each individual event. He won the 1992 U.S. Olympie trials in March, was named team co-captain and rolled right to the starting blocks in Barcelona. He got off well, held the lead by a arter of a second at the turn and barely edged out Rafal Szukala of Poland, 53.32 to 53.35 seconds, An-thony Nesty of Surinam, the 1988 gold medalist, was third in 53.41.

The same could be said for Nall, Brookwho has been the darling of the swimming world since setting her world record of 2:25.35 at the trials. But Nall had nothing but praise for the 14-year-old, born on the same day as she, two years later... who beat her.

"I've never seen her swim be-fore," she said. "I think she's great. She's young yet. She must be a very strong little girl, and very, very,

The Septic Tank Vote

MARTHA'S VINEYARD, house as well as the architect and warrous caretakers. made up my mind whom I am going to vote for until the candidates tell me where they stand on septic tanks. The septic tank problem in the United States is crying out for a solution because it is very much connected to the values of the American family

I'll be frank and admit that I came to septic tanks late in life. I was sitting on Martha's Vineyard watching inspired speeches on the "new covenant" when my wife came in and announced that the septic stopped up.

The reason I Buchwald didn't get excited was that I didn't know what a septic tank was. When she explained it to me in layman's language, I suggested that she call the plumber.

"Plumbers are always more frightened of women than they are of men," I told her.

The next morning the plumber came and confirmed my wife's suspicion that the toilets were stopped up. "By the way, where is your septic tank?" he asked. "No one ever told us. I thought that plumbers are supposed to know those things." 'We're inside men - that's out-

A Watteau Bargain

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The National Gallery of Art has revealed that it snagged a previously unidenrified drawing by 18th-century French painter Antoine Watteau for only $2,800. Recent Watteau drawings have brought $100,000 to $757,000. The drawing titled "The Gallant Gardener" was acquired at a Sotheby's sale in London on July 6. Sotbeby's had failed to recognize the work as that of Watteau, listing it only as "French School, 18th century, Artist anonymous."

No one had any idea where the septic tank was huried. One man thought that it might be under the screened porch, which meant that we would have to tear the porch down to empty the tank. The contractor advised that experts be

A man with a metal detector and Geiger counter arrived the next day and found nothing but an empty Budweiser beer can.

I told my wife, "I can't believe it. Every politician has told us that Americans are the most technologically advanced people in the world, but nobody can tell us where our septic tank is located."

'I wonder if Dan Quayle will make the waste problem a campaign issue?"

"He will have to if he hopes to attract the supporters of Ross

The next day two gentlemen with shovels showed up.
They said that they would dig for

The men found nothing.
"Maybe there is no septic tank," suggested to the boss. "Perhaps everything is just emptying out wil-ly-nily toward Chilmark." He sbook his head. "There has to be a septic tank somewhere. Do you have any objection if we bulldoze the vegetable garden?"

"I don't, but it makes my wife very unhappy every time she sees heavy equipment attacking her string beans. Have you dug up the driveway?"

"Yes, sir, and the retaining wall, We'd like to have a crack at the West Chop tennis courts, but the members always get angry when you look for a septic tank on their property. Suppose we broke up the cement on your garage floor?

The Wandering Mapmaker And His New Look at Cities

PARIS - Modern maps are usually of the starkest utility, indicating how to find a spot but lacking a sense of place, Furthermore, as every tourist knows, they behave like windhlown umhrellas: impossible to furl once their moment of use has Jamshid Kooros has come up with a style of city map that is practical enough to use (and, since the map folds only on one direction, easy to stowl and, in its larger version, pretty enough to frame. Kooros, a vivacious wandering Iranian architect, likes to think of his maps as vertical portraits of cities, their colors and shapes.

His map of Paris emphasizes what he calls the city's spine, from the Bastille at its bottom end to the Arc de Triomphe on top. By using Turgot-like aerial views but cunningly altering perspectives when he wants to show off a building or its relation to the whole, he portrays the strong central axis of Paris and the logic of its parts.

"I have always been as drawn to the context of buildings as to the buildings themselves." Kooros says. "What I think is interesting is to have at the same time the profile and the floor plan of a city. You get the pattern of the streets but also you get that long shot through the Arc."

Kooros draws Paris in dark gray, soft yellow and the hlue of the Seine. His London map is green with red brick and with small centers stuck together at oblique angles. "Only the Mall is laid out as a Paris avenue.

He walked the cities before drawing the maps. "When you walk, every building you come on is in context and suddenly everything makes sense." Tiny Beau-champ Place in London, for example, takes on stature in his map as part of the main artery between Belgrave Square and the Brompton Road.

He has also drawn Washington and Giverny, in which he emphasizes the contrast between the massed rectangular flower beds and the sinuous lines of trees. He has walked from Orleans to Saumur in preparation for a map of the châteaux of the Loire - "while walking you feel inclines under your feet which you wouldn't notice in a car imtil you change gear, and you don't have that sheet of glass between you and what

Rome, which promises to be a headache.

His maps show the difference between an architect's sense of space and the more fully detailed maps which look as if they had been made by engineers. "Engineering graceful calligraphy and treatment of vegetation that looks rather Persian.

"I think I must have been put on a carpet when I was very small," he says. Kooros, 54, was sent from Iran to school England, then studied civil engineering at MIT before switching to architecture. "After a year. I realized I had a very Victorian idea of what engineering was all about. I was thinking of Brunel or Eiffel and instead found myself doing mindcrunching numbers. And this was before computers, so you would have to stay up all night to do them."

The architecture that was being made when he graduated was, he says, extremely dogmatic -- "a sort of utopian clean white architecture that would solve crime and all social problems." On a trip home to Iran in the 1950s he was struck by the variety and warmth of indigenous architecture. "I saw traditional buildings, very much shaped, not all this plain stuff, and thought it was much better." His photographs from Iran were shown at the innovating "Architecture Without Architects" exhibit at New York's Museum of Modern Art.

He returned to the U.S. and built offices, dormitories, hospitals and garages, then found a measure of joy restoring old buildings in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

The godlike attitude of contemporary architects, the traditional American division between architect and contractor -"so they can sue each other," Kooros says — the glorification of high technology and the fad for exquisite drawings — "If yoo can draw it why huild it and if you can build it why draw it?" Kooros wonders -all conspired to make him dissatisfied with building in the U.S. In 1970 he returned to Iran and remained there until obliged by the revolution to leave. It had been the happiest time

"I learned a lot. I unlearned a lot of what I learned at MIT and what I learned was, I think, much more sound. It wasn't based on super-intellectualizing and egos. I didn't set foot outside Iran for five years, I didn't read an architectural journal, I was just building."

He built private houses and worked on projects for a service station, a mosque and for low-cost housing that would be modified by its inhabitants as times and city functions or where the focal points variations simple traditional huilding ma-are, he says. His maps also often have a terials lent themselves to, by the fact that client and builder agreed on the basis of a handshake without the intervention of lawyers, and by the simple logic of the vernacular style.

"The way houses would be oriented with a verandah facing south which would mean that in the summer the verandah would shade the windows and in the winter when the sun was lower it would come into the rooms. And then you would have colored glass, so it would be gay, like a glass garden. These are the things I found interesting."

The West could have learned from many of these traditions, he felt. "But that was another life," he says now. After the revolution he worked with the architect Hugh Jacobson in Washington but was too often an absentee when he had to fly back to Tehran to discuss expropriated family property. A free-lance profession that would keep him mobile seemed the solution and he began to make his maps. Making a map, Kooros says, is not un-like making a building in a severely con-stricted site. "It's a reaction against being squeezed as far as space goes. You make an asset out of being pressed into a form."

Because he is spatially oriented, Kooros sees cities in terms of space and color. "And in a way I idealize things, making them maybe the way the people who designed them wanted them to be." In each of his maps -which will be sold in book and souvenir shops and museums and offered as corporate gifts - Kooros appends a small drawing of himself in period costume in the company of — for Paris, Baron Haussmann and, for London, Christopher Wren. For Rome there will be a moh — "Bernini, Borromini, Bramante, Michelangelo. And Kooros!"

The maps have a nice sense of fun and indeed Kooros loves making them. They give him freedom, a small income, and a means of continuing the craft tradition he came to love in Iran.
"And," be adds, "I don't feel that I'm pushing an unwanted house down someone's throat."

In Washington, where he still alights be-tween travels, his architect friends live vi-cariously and jealously, he says, from the fact that he is doing something he so much enjoys.

"I think maybe everyone should change their lives every five years," he says. "Maybe there is something to be said for revolu-
